Williamsburg, Va. – Somanystadiums.com, the premier content provider of college football stadium reviews, has long felt the struggles of planning and executing college football tailgates far away from home. From the exclusive access for high dollar donors, to expensive third-party providers, to the logistic challenges of hauling grills and equipment halfway across the country, the barriers for the visiting tailgater are thicker than a Big Ten offensive line. It is particularly frustrating, knowing there are plenty of home stadium tailgaters that would welcome in visitors if only there was a way to connect this community of sports fans.

Hence, the Somanystadiums.com Tailgate Platform was born. Tailgaters can now list and open their Tailgates to others. Visiting fans can search and book Tailgates based on the type of experience they are looking for. And, if they can't find a Tailgate, they can create a "Wanted Tailgate" listing, sending out the call for generous fellow tailgaters to respond.

Somanystadiums.com was already the spot for humorous, real-life reviews of stadiums – there's no click-bait generating, AI garbage here. They tell it like it is, with no free sideline passes for "hallowed" programs. The truth can hurt, but it can also be hilarious. Hence the merchandise addition to the site of insult t-shirts and mugs added earlier this year. The new Tailgate reservation system completes this college football experience community and is now the one-stop shop for game day planning.

Says Somanystadiums.com founder, Matt "Tree" Triola, "It's about time – now can somebody get me a tailgate in Boise!"
